The MMR includes Camp Edwards, the Otis Air National Guard Base, Air Station Cape Cod and other areas. Hunting has been available on the Camp Edwards section of the MMR since 1956 through a permit system and controlled hunt managed by the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife (MassWildlife) and cooperating agencies. Due to increased security concerns throughout the country, access to the Massachusetts Military Reservation (MMR) is restricted, and necessitates a pre-registration of hunters. Hunters should be aware that some areas of MMR will be closed to hunting because of active programs to investigate and remediate groundwater contamination of the Cape Cod sole-source aquifer.

A controlled public hunt is necessary for managing the local deer population density to protect the MMR's natural resources, reduce deer/vehicle collisions and the incidence of Lyme disease. Hunters who want to deer hunt on Camp Edwards must pre-register using this form, comply with all regulations pertaining to this hunt and undergo a daily check in and check out*.

Camp Edwards/Otis/MMR Deer Hunt General Information for Hunters - 2004

Changes in base security status may result in cancellation of the hunt.

Camp Edwards (also known as Otis Air Force Base or the Massachusetts Military Reservation) is located in the towns of Bourne and Sandwich on Cape Cod. A controlled hunt is the only hunting allowed at Camp Edwards. Camp Edwards is an active military training area and access is strictly controlled. About 14,000 acres will be open to hunting. The hunting area is dominated by pitch pine - scrub oak habitat and is separated into sections by marked dirt roads. The topography has many hills and hollows typical of the terminal moraine. In past years, the controlled hunts harvested an average of 100 deer annually.
